The Knox Trail - Locations

There were thirty monuments erected within New York State to mark the trail. A listing was published of the locations in the Annual Report of the Conservation Department to the Legislature, New York Legislative Documents for 151st Session, 1928. That listing is reproduced below.

Another listing was compiled by the State Historian's Office in 1952, providing more detailed location data. This information has been inserted into the 1928 listing below in italics.

Some of the monuments listed below are missing and several have been moved from their original positions, often miles away and onto different roads. A complete field guide to the existing monuments is part of this website. You can go to that field guide from any of the locations listed below by using the links attached to each entry.

The Advisory Board of Battlefields and Historic Sites selected a type design for markers and obtained and placed 30 of them through the advice and cooperation of the State Historian.

Henry Knox Cannon Trail

In charge of the artillery for the Continental Army, Henry Knox volunteered to bring 29 of the cannons captured from the fort at Crown Point and 30 from fort Ticonderoga to Cambridge, MA. With ice barely able to support the weight of the sleighs and cannon Henry Knox and his teamsters had a difficult passage over the Mohawk and Hudson Rivers. On January 9th, 1776, the last of the cannons had crossed the Hudson River at Albany and Knox rode ahead to oversee their safe onward journey. On March 17th the British army evacuated Boston.

Henry Knox (1750-1806) Major General in American Revolution and 1st Secretary of War under Washington. b. 25 Jul 1750 in Boston, MA. Orphaned at age of 12, he was apprenticed to a bookseller, and in 1771 opened the "London Book Store" in Boston when he was 21. He attempted to prevent the Boston Massacre of 1770. His military knowledge was gained from the textbooks which he supplied to British officers. He joined the American forces at the outbreak of the war and fought at Bunker Hill.

He planned the defenses of the camps before Boston and brought much needed artillery from Lake George and the border. At Trenton he crossed the river before the main body and rendered such service that he was made brigadier general and chief of artillery in the Continental Army. He was present at Princeton, Monmouth, and Yorktown; and after the surrender of Cornwallis was made major general (1781). He took the initial steps in creating the U.S. Military Academy in 1779; was a member of the court-martial which tried Major Andre in 1780; and commanded West Point in 1782. He was one of Washington's most trusted advisors and a close personal friend.

In April 1783 he drafted the plan of a society to be formed by American and French officers of the Revolution, to be called the Cincinnati. He was first secretary-general of the society from 1783-99, and vice president in 1805. He was secretary of War in 1785-94, being the first to hold that office under the Federal government. His plan to organize a national militia system was thwarted by the Republicans.

His Masonic membership is hazy, but he is thought to have been a member of St. John's Regimental Lodge at Morristown, N.J., which was warranted in 1775. He is credited with helping to constitute Washington [Military] Lodge [No. 10] at West Point in 1779, and is recorded as a visitor to Williamsburg Lodge No. 6, Williamsburg, VA; St. John's Lodge, Boston; Amity Lodge No. 6, Camden, Maine; and Orient No. 15, Thomaston, Maine.

Major General Henry Knox Lodge of Boston, Mass. was named in his honor and constituted aboard the famous Old Ironsides in the Charlestown Navy Yard, March 17, 1926. d. 25 Oct 1806.
